the items listed in the Bibliography are a few of the resources explored in my studies of graphic design, typography, letter arts and in preparing for this presentation. It is offered with hope that it will be a base for expanding your knowledge of calligraphy- related topics. Elearly, I went overboard investing in historic books, magazines and references. However, found that Wikipedia.org is an excellent source for general research, by topic. The website for Professor Luc Devroye, of McGill University, Toronto, Canada is excellent. It has no advertising, no cookies just "free education" for everyone as Professor Devroye tates in the homepage. Please give appropriate credit lines when using his materials. It is I made "new discoveries", I kept "talking with you" my imaginary friend or buddy from cora Pearl's classes on Elements of Design and Principles of Design. I became excited about my discovery of this or that, and "I knew" that "you" could incorporate these ideas into your uperb calligraphic works. Then, it would strike me that you probably know these things because of years of experience in calligraphy and graphic design But, "it" was new to me.
